

Lord GG and the de Courcy triplets

Once upon a time, the Lord of the Manor for the charmingly named village of Titty Hill in Sussex was Lord GG de Percy. The de Percy family had been lords of the manor for centuries and by the time young Lord GG took over it covered a couple of counties and had about 300 peasantry serfs. Lords had total control over the lives of their peasants including Droit du seigneur, the right of the lord of the manor to deflower local peasant brides on their wedding night before their newlywed husbands, a right vigorously exercised by the Lords de Percy for generations. And young Lord GG was keen to keep his end up.

Lord GG had been off in the Holy Land fighting infidels for a couple of years and was feeling pretty stiff and exhausted by the time he returned to Titty Hill. Nonetheless he was keen to exercise his lordly right of droit du seigneur early and often. Now it happened that on Lord GG's manor there lived three peasant sisters, the de Courcy triplets. They were about to marry three peasant brothers and as a cost saving they were having three weddings on the same day. Lord GG knew a one night stand with the triplets would be tough, but he figured if he beefed up on kale shakes, acai berries and maca powder smoothies he'd live to fight another crusade.

Lord GG's night with the de Courcy triplets – before and.....after!!

If you'd like to hear more about Lord GG's night with the de Courcy triplets, why not ask him yourself when you come along to the 2016 Balls Up at Wattle Park Chalet on 15 October 2016.